The Conference of Policy Research on Youth Transitions

The youth employment question has become a global policy issue on the world stage, since the global financial crisis of 2007/8 and the 2011/12 Arab uprisings. The global reach of the challenge through their disproportionate, lasting and multi-faceted impact on young women and men, point to structural changes that are at work in a globalized world making youth transitions more difficult and uncertain. The widening gap between youth aspirations and the realities they face shape youth transitions from school to work as well as their participation in political and societal spheres.

At the global level, the 2030 Development Agenda and its 17 Goals provide a platform for converging action by policy makers and multiple stakeholders across the world. Youth transitions are central across this agenda. The Global Initiative on Decent Jobs for Youth, a UN-led initiative coordinated by ILO and launched in 2016, under the aegis of this Development Agenda, is forging an inclusive multi-stakeholder partnership to scale up action and impact on youth employment and the school to work dimension of youth transitions. The 2030 SDG framework and the Global initiative emphasize the critical importance of evidence-based policy making and invite the academic and research community to engage proactively.

The two days Conference on Interdisciplinary Policy Research on Youth Transitions (Geneva, 20-21 February 2020) brings together academia, researchers and think tanks, from global North and South, working on youth policies across disciplines, with policy and action partners, including government, international organizations, private sector and civil society. Various research studies, surveys and policy reports by local and international institutions, attempt to analyze specific aspects of these changes for the future of work, for inclusive and sustainable development and for political stability in different global and local contexts. The Conference will provide a forum to critically review the state of knowledge and evidence on youth transitions and to renew the policy research agenda. Key dimensions of youth transitions in particular transitions from school to work; conflict and peace; civic and political participation will be examined.

The Conference Programme includes two segments. In the first public segment (Thursday the 20th February and the morning of the 21st) through plenary and parallel panels, the latest knowledge on selected themes of highest policy relevance for youth transitions will be presented and debated. Each panel will identify gaps for further research and pathways for bridging evidence with action. The first segment of the Conference is open for interactive exchange with a broad audience.

The Global Interdisciplinary Network of Policy Research on Youth Transitions

In the second segment, invited participants from the academic and research community and key partners will discuss the vision, strategy and launch of the first Global Network of Policy Research on Youth Transitions. The Network aims at reviewing and renewing the policy research agenda and interface, on a continuous basis, in the fast-changing environment.

Through cooperation amongst members supported by a hub at the Graduate Institute of International and Development Studies in Geneva, the Global Network will pursue a threefold objective:

1. connecting dispersed sources of policy research undertakings,
2. promoting further independent research and understanding of youth transitions critical for policy and action and,
3. influencing global and national policy making.

The Network aims at an inclusive and global outreach to academia, researchers and think tanks who work on youth transition issues in the global South and North, East and West.

Following the launch, the Global Network will actively welcome further contributions and expanded partnership through modalities that will be announced later.

The Conference is organized with the support of ILO, multi-stakeholder partners of the Global Initiative on Decent Jobs for Youth and several academic and research institutions interested in the creation, dissemination and use of policy relevant research on youth transitions.
